About Frontline Academy

The science of logistics is as old as civilization. Ever since man has had trade there has been a need to move goods from their place of production to the place of sale. This is the most basic and simplest form of logistics. Today, logistics plays a very important role in the economics of a country. The export and import of goods from different countries across the World requires the coordination of transport systems and people in different cities in different countries. Added to these are the varying and complex documentations and clearances that different countries require. Even within a country, smooth flow of goods in minimum time is essential for the economy as producers can sell faster and produce goods faster.

Logistics has evolved into a complex science that requires its own specialized field of study.

Specialized logistics managers are in high demand by companies in different countries. A graduate in logistics from an accredited institute can, therefore, look forward to a very satisfying and challenging career. In fact, according to the McKinsey Institute, logistics in India is expected to grow to US$320 million by 2025, while careers in logistics and supply chain management are projected to grow by 30% in the next 10 years, much higher than the average for all occupations.
